One day she entered our library in a confused and uncertain manner, quite different from her bustling way. She stood at the door, with a letter between her thumb and finger, which she held out at arm's length, as if she had a gunpowder plot in her grasp. In answer to our inquiries as to her busines, she answered "An' it plase yer honor, I'm a poor girl, an' han't much larnin,' and ye sees. place yer honor, Paddy O'Reilly, and the better than him doesn't brathe in ould Ireland, has been writin' me a letter -- a love letther, place yer honor ; an'-an'-"

We guessed her embarrassment, and offered to relieve it by reading it to her. Still she hesitated, while she twisted a bit of raw cotton between her fingers.

"Sure," she resumed, "an' that's jist what I want, but it isn't a gentleman like yerself that would be likin' to know ov the sacrets between us an' so (here she twisted the cotton quite nervously) if it'll only plase yer honor, while yer rading it, so that ye may not hear it yerself, ye'll jist put this bit of cotton in yer ears an' stop up yer hearin,' an' thin the sacrets I ll be unbeknown to ye!"

We hadn't the heart to refuse her, and with the gravest face possible, con plied with her request; but often since, we have laughed heartily as we related the incident.
